

The Single Malt Scotches of Scotland

The Single Malt Scotches of Scotland

The earliest record of distilling in Scotland was in 1494, when an entry in the Exchequer Rolls stated "Eight bolls of Malt to Friar John Cor where with to make aqua vitea" (Latin for 'water of life'). The practice still thrives, though the number of distilleries have drastically reduced. Learn about this fascinating 'water of life' and taste through the five regions of Scotch Whiskey.
